|  | COOKIE POLICY WHAT ARE COOKIES The so-called “cookies” are data created by a server and stored as text files in a computer’s hard disk or in any device used by the user in order to access the Internet (smartphone, tablets, etc.). The cookies allow to collect information regarding the navigation performed by the user on a website. The cookies can be permanently stored in your computer and have a variable duration (the so-called “persistent cookies”), but they can as well disappear when you close the browser or they can have a limited duration (the so-called “session cookies”). The cookies can be installed on your computer by the site you’re visiting (the so-called “first party cookies”) or they can be installed by other websites (the so-called “third party websites”). HOW WE USE COOKIES 1. Technical cookies a. session/navigation cookies: the use of the so-called “session cookies” (which do not get persistently stored in the user’s computer and disappear once the browser is closed) is strictly limited to the transmission of session identifiers – session IDs- (which are made of random numbers generated by the server itself). These Session IDs are necessary in order to allow a safe and efficient exploration of the site and of its applications. The so-called “session cookies” used in the Company’s website make sure there is no need to use other information technologies, which may be potentially dangerous for the confidentiality of the user navigation. Moreover, session cookies do not allow the acquisition of the user’s identifying personal data. Session cookies do not require your consent; b. persistent cookies: even after the user leaves the website, the persistent cookies remain stored in his or her hard drive until they get deleted or they expire. The Company’s website itself creates this type of cookies and stores them on the device in order to be able to read them the moment the user returns to visit the website. The purpose of persistent cookies is to collect identifying information about the user and allow him or her to find the same preferences previously settled (for example language, etc.) even when subsequently visiting the website. 2 Analytical Cookies: these cookies are installed in order to collect aggregate data mostly of statistical nature (e.g. how long you are staying on a page or how many visitors navigate the website); first party analytical cookies: they can be assimilated to the technical cookies as the website you’re visiting in that moment directly stores them on the computer in order to improve the website’s usability. Your consent for the first party analytical cookies is not required; c. third party analytical cookies: they are created and installed by third parties in order to analyse the user’s navigation path and subsequently create statistics about who visits the website. This allows to improve the offer of contents, show similar products and eventually create a targeted advertising. The system used is Google Analytics, which is a web service analytic system provided by Google LLC (“Google”). As well as the other systems, Google Analytics makes use of the cookies in order to allow the website to analyse how the users use the website. The information generated by the cookies about how the website is used will be transmitted to and deposited at the |

Google servers in the United States. Google will use this information with the purpose to track and examine the usage which is being made of the website, fill in reports about the website's activities and provide other services regarding the Internet usage. Google might as well transfer this information to third parties only where this is allowed by the Law or where the third parties process such information on behalf of Google. Google will not associate the user IP address to any other data owned by Google. Anyway, the user can refuse to use the cookies by selecting the appropriate setting on his or her browser; however, this may prevent the user from using all of the website's functions. As the IP address is visible, the usage of third party analytical cookies necessitates your consent. By clicking on the button "Continue" placed on the banner or by continuing with the navigation on the Company's website, the user allows Google to process his or her Data for the above-listed purposes. .

MANAGEMENT OF COOKIE PREFERENCES

The consent regarding the usage of cookies is given in one of the following ways:

- by clicking on the button "Continue" which you'll find on the banner containing a short Information Note, which appears when the user enters the website;
- by continuing the navigation on the Company's website accessing another area of the website or selecting an element of the same page.

HOW TO MODIFY THE COOKIE SETTINGS

The majority of the browsers are initially set in order to automatically accept the cookies. This means that, in any moment, the user has the possibility to set his or her browser in order to enable all of the cookies, enable only some, or disable them.

Moreover, the user can set the browser preferences in order to be advised whenever a cookie is stored on his or her computer. At the end of each navigation session the user can delete all of the cookies which have been stored from his or her hard drive. If he or she wants to delete the cookies stored in the cookie folder of the browser use, the user should know that each browser has different procedures to manage the settings. By clicking on the down-listed links the user can receive specific instructions for some of the main browsers:
